The ATHLETIC TYPE

BUT WHAT REALLY gets me," Susie said with a good deal of feeling, "is the athletic type!"

"Hmmm," replied her most confidential friend, Diane. "I know what you mean!"

Now, this might not seem like much of a conversation to most people, but to Gary Simpkins, who had happened to overhear it, it meant plenty! "So that's the type she goes for!" he said, turning the matter over in his mind. "Then that's the type I'll have to be!"

For quite a while, Gary had had a considerable crush on Susie and had been plotting and planning ways and means to make her more interested in him. Whenever they went out on dates, Susie seemed to be having a good time, all right, but nothing special. They went to the movies and had a soda and talked a while.

"I see it now," Gary thought. "She wants a guy with more glamor, more zing! Gosh, maybe she even wants someone on the football team or something! I'd better get busy or I'll miss out!"

It was a heroic task that Gary set himself, one worthy of a true knight of old. To begin with, he arose one hour earlier than usual every day and did his setting-up exercises. This was to build the muscles he'd be needing for athletics.

Then he dug up an old tennis racket and practiced against a backboard whenever he could find time. That was to train his eye and to give him quick reflexes.

Among his other activities, he managed to find time to race around the park in case he should turn out for track. "Have to get the old leg muscles in shape!" he told himself sternly. Then there was rowing. The caretaker over at the lake would let him take a boat out for half-price when things weren't too busy around there. "Build up my back and arms," Gary would mutter, pulling at the oars.

All this time, he was letting Susie know about his prowess. "Wow!" he would boast, meeting her after school, "I clocked myself at the track today! I'm getting fast!" Or, "Take a look at that, willya?" Flexing his arm, he'd show off the firm muscle. Or, "Guess what the Coach said to me today! Believe it or not, he said..." And lots more of the same.

Then he noticed something strange about Susie. For a while, she'd accepted dates with him and then, for no reason she would give, she seemed to cool off considerably. "I'm sorry, I can't go," she would say. Not even an excuse or anything!

Something was definitely wrong and Gary couldn't figure it out. At least, not by himself. So one afternoon, spotting Diane on the street, he asked her. "Gosh, doesn't Susie even like me?" he pleaded. "I'm doin' the best I can! Ever since I heard her tell you that the athletic type really gets her, I've been knocking myself out and..."

Diane laughed, long and merrily. "Guess you didn't hear all of it," she said. "Susie was saying that of all the boys she can't stand, it's the athletic type that really gets her! They're so conceited, bragging all the time! But you know the type that really sends her?"

"N...no," Gary admitted sadly.

"Your type," she winked. "But don't tell her I told you!"

DOUBLE TROUBLE PLUS!

BUT, BILLY," his pal Murph pointed out reasonably, "you've got to go home sometime! You just can't stay here forever!"

"Maybe not, but I'd sure like to!" Billy Miller sighed. "It's gonna be very tough, facing the music at home!"

"Aw, come on! So you failed in math! So you've got to break the news at home and get it over with!" Murph pulled the despondent Billy to his feet and tugged him out of the school yard. "Sure your folks'll be sore, but you can tell 'em you'll study hard and pass next time!"

As the two boys walked down the street, Billy sighed even more deeply. "Sore"! He repeated Murph's word. "My dad'll be ragin'! Of all the subjects I could've flunked, it had to be math! Me, the only son and heir of my father, the adding-machine king! It wouldn't be so bad if I flunked English Lit or French, but math! With a father who manufactures adding-machines! What do you think he'll do to me, Murph?"

"Ah, what can he do?" Murph meant to be consoling, but even he could see that Billy was in a particularly tight spot. Breaking the news to father might mean all sorts of unpleasant things...no allowance, no time out from homework, an after-school tutor, or just the frost treatment...with icicles! "I see what you mean," he said. "Well...what can you do? Good luck, pal!"

Murph and Billy shook hands gravely at the Miller door. Then, Billy squared his shoulders and marched into the house like a soldier who knew he was about to be court-martialled. As he entered the front hall, the thought came to him that maybe, if he just tiptoed up to his room, he could escape the awful moment! Or at least put it off for a while! But no such luck!

"Bill? That you, son?" Mr. Miller's voice boomed out heartily from the living room.

"Hi, dad," Billy answered spiritlessly.

"Come on in. There's someone here I want you to meet!"

There was a distinguished-looking elderly gentleman with his father, a man who smiled genially at Billy as he shook his hand. "This is my son, Professor Burden," Mr. Miller said. "Billy, this is Professor Burden, my math teacher at college!"

Billy began to see spots before his eyes. This was terrible! Worse than anything he could have dreamed up even! Why, his father would be so full of the old school spirit, he'd never listen to...

"Well, young man," smiled the Professor, "if you're a chip off the old block, let me tell you that your father was the worst math student I ever had! In fact, he was the worst in the history of the school! He couldn't even do simple math problems, could you, Miller? That's what inspired you to invent the Miller Adding Wizard, if I'm not mistaken!"

"You're not mistaken, sir," Mr. Miller laughed. "But your good memory is pretty embarrassing!"

"Honest?" Billy was so thrilled he forgot his grammar. "I never knew that!" Maybe it wasn't going to be so hard, after all. "Dad," he said manfully, "I've got something to tell you! And Prof. Burden!"
